The Adoption

Marybeth and Warren Peter were a well-to-do couple living in New York City. They had two biological children, but they always wanted a larger family. In 1988, they adopted six children from foster care. The children were all siblings, and they ranged in age from 2 to 12 years old.

The Peters were initially excited to have the children in their home. They bought them new clothes and toys, and they enrolled them in private school. However, the children soon began to show signs of abuse.

The Abuse

The abuse began shortly after the children moved in with the Peters. The Peters would beat the children with belts and extension cords. They would also starve them and lock them in the basement as punishment.

The children were also sexually abused. Marybeth Peter would force the girls to perform oral sex on her. Warren Peter would molest the boys.

The abuse continued for years. The children were too afraid to tell anyone what was happening. They knew that if they did, the Peters would hurt them even more.

The Investigation

In 1994, one of the children finally told a teacher about the abuse. The teacher reported the allegations to the authorities, and an investigation was launched.

The investigation revealed a horrific pattern of abuse. The children were covered in bruises and scars. They were also malnourished and underweight.

The Peters were arrested and charged with child abuse. They were convicted and sentenced to prison.

The Aftermath

The Peter children were adopted by a new family. They have since gone on to live happy and successful lives. However, the scars of their past abuse remain.

The Peter children's story is a reminder of the devastating effects of child abuse. It is also a story of hope and resilience. The children were able to overcome their traumatic experiences and go on to live happy and fulfilling lives.
